Courses Taught

Instructor, Sound for Theatre (THEA024), Pomona College (2014, 2016)

Course was an overview of sound technology and design concepts. After completion of the course, students were able to connect equipment in a basic sound system from microphone to speaker. Students also understood the concepts and design philosophies and created a fully realized design of a Shakespearian play.

Instructor, Intermediate Sound Technology (TH 363B), California State University- Northridge, (2012)

Course was a next step in the development of students design skills. This class featured the communication and collaboration skills needed to become an effective sound designer. After completion of the course, students were better skilled in audio editing in a digital audio workstation and created two different designs of plays that were fully programmed and ready to be used in a real life production.

Instructor, Introduction to Sound Design (Drama 50D), University of California-Irvine (2012)

Course was an overview of sound technology and how equipment connects and operates. After completion of the course, students were able to connect a basic sound system from microphone to speaker. Students also studied the programming and routing of the application QLab for theatrical use. Students created a final project of telling a story without words, effectively telling a radio play plot-line without the use of any dialogue to assist the listener.
